For purposes of these Clauses, a substantially responsive Proposal is one which conforms to all the terms and conditions of the RFP without material deviations. The Purchaser's determination of a Proposal's responsiveness is based on the contents of the Proposal itself without recourse to extrinsic evidence.

21. Evaluation and comparison of proposals

A two-stage procedure is utilised in evaluating the proposals, with evaluation of the technical proposal being completed prior to any price proposal being opened and compared. The price proposal of the Proposals will be opened only for submissions that passed the minimum technical score of 70% of the obtainable score of 700 points in the evaluation of the technical proposals.

Annex III

Terms of Reference:

Data Base of Practitioners within the Programme of Strengthening Capacities in the Western Balkans Countries to Address Environmental Problems through Remediation of High Priority Hot Spots (Regional Environmental Programme)

I Background Information:

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Country Offices in Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Macedonia FYR, Montenegro, Serbia and UN ATSCR 1244 Kosovo developed a regional environmental programme in nine locations in the mentioned Western Balkans countries/territories suffering from the legacy of polluting industries and requiring industrial renewal, environmental cleanup and new economic initiative.

The goal of this three year Programme (<http://www2.undp.org.yu>) is to improve the environmental situation and quality of life for citizens living in and around polluted areas in the most economical way, improve local and national policy dialogue and increase supply of domestic professional services in the environmental management sector. While the main focus will be the physical works needed to mitigate the ecological problems, institutional strengthening and capacity building are also an important priority for this Programme.

Over the past two decades the environmental issues have not been amongst the top national priorities in the Western Balkans. Understandably, priorities to date have focused on the reforms needed to strengthen security, to rebuild the economy and to improve general living conditions. As a result investment in environmental infrastructure such as wastewater treatment, air-pollution abatement and monitoring, and industrial and communal waste management and contaminated sites clean up are still waiting their turn.

A number of industrial towns in the Western Balkans region face a complex challenge due to past industrial development and its pollution legacy combined with the need to generate economic growth for the future. The environmental situation in these hot spots is a direct cause of poor health and related poverty and presents a major barrier to future investment and related economic opportunities for the local population. These communities face considerable problems in requiring environmental clean-up of the area while also struggling with problems of poverty, lack of infrastructure and services and few prospects of employment for the younger generations.

Because of the proximity and geographic connectedness of the Balkans, the ongoing or potential pollution from these hot spots has a significant cross border impact on air and water quality (rivers, lakes and the sea). The environmental situation in these impacted communities also presents a major barrier to future investment and therefore reduces related economic opportunities for the local population. The situation is often further complicated by uncoordinated or even conflicting plans and demands of various sectors of government, business and society. In many cases the poorest citizens (Roma, Ashkalia, Egyptians) live in the areas worst affected by pollution and degradation and addressing these problems are taking resources away from these communities, limiting funds and future oriented initiatives. Success in cleaning up these locations and solving environmental and urban problems will remove the barrier to attract new investment from inhabitants themselves, private sector, banks, donors, etc. Thus, the return of economic activity should provide options for new industrial proponents to carry out further remediation if the site is attractive for investment in terms of labour and support services, and the regulatory framework is functioning appropriately.

The international, and especially EU, experience in revival of former industrial regions shows that development breakthrough in pollution hot spots is best achieved through integrated initiatives at the local level, addressing the local environmental, social and economic needs. Such initiatives cannot be successful if they are only undertaken by one of the sectors such as environment, welfare, health or economy alone. They require creative cross-sector solutions based on stakeholder dialogue and public participation and in many cases the most valuable outcome is not only cleaning up the problem, but in raising awareness to government and community of the importance of the environment and leaving increased capacities to deal with such problems.

Step by step clean up of polluted areas, investment in cleaner technologies to reduce waste, wastewater, site contamination and air pollution must be combined with stronger integration of environmental concerns into sector policies and cross-border cooperation. This programme is expected to provide a significant step forward in this direction.
